Supreme Court, Program Graduates to Present Family Treatment Court Overview

For release Monday, January 12, 2026

CHARLESTON, W.Va. – Members and staff of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, along with three program graduates, will provide a one-hour presentation on the operations and benefits of Family Treatment Courts at noon Tuesday, Jan. 13, in the House of Delegates Chamber at the state Capitol.

Lawmakers, media and members of the public are invited to attend the presentation in the House Chamber. It will also be livestreamed on the Legislature's website at <https://www.wvlegislature.gov/live.cfm>.

Chief Justice C. Haley Bunn, Justice Thomas H. Ewing – who oversaw the Family and Adult Treatment Courts in Fayette County – and Supreme Court Director of Probation Services Stephanie Bond and Statewide Family Treatment Court Specialist Katie White will be joined by three program graduates to discuss their experiences with Family Treatment Courts as well as answer any questions about the courts.

Family Treatment Courts are specialized, problem-solving courts designed to support parents in overcoming substance use disorders while working toward the safe reunification of their families. The Legislature created Family Treatment Courts as a pilot program in 2019, later making them a permanent program under supervision of the Supreme Court in 2021.

The courts offer immediate intervention, intensive supervision and comprehensive treatment services to help parents access recovery resources in a timely manner, which helps reduce the amount of time children spend in foster care and return them to a safe home environment with their families.
